

COMPLETE LINE-UP OF MEMORIAL PARADES HELD TO-DAY

LESS THAN 500 VETS
OF '60'S IN PARADE
ON MEMORIAL DAY

Bravely they waved their hands at the crowds. Occasionally one of them doffed a visored cap, or the big, black, corded soft hat that is the G. A. R.'s other badge. Young women tossed flowers to the Old Boys or darted from the curb to pin a rose upon the breast of a blue coat.

As, with hands raised feebly to hat brims, the Boys in Blue passed the reviewing stand, their alignment was somewhat broken but they were greeted with such cheering and such applause as left no doubt in their hearts of the measure of patriotic esteem New York retains for those who fought at Gettysburg or Appomattox.

Riverside Drive's observance was duplicated in some degree in other boroughs. Brooklyn's parade, at the same hour, ended at the Soldiers and Sailors' Arch in Prospect Park.

The march up the Drive, from 74th Street, began promptly at 9 o'clock. Major Gen. John F. O'Ryan reviewed the column at the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument, 59th Street.

The Old Guard of New York provided the special guard of honor to Gen. O'Ryan, and among those who assisted him to review the parade were Secretary Willis Holly of the Park Board, Lieut. John P. Pennington, representing the Navy; Job E. Hedges, the orator of the day; Gen. Daniel Appleton and Justice Gildersleeve.

At the stand, following the parade, formal exercises were held, the speaker being Job E. Hedges. At 12th Street the marching thousands turned to the east, disbanding at Broadway.

The Interborough Rapid Transit Company took full occasion to heap inconvenience and cruelty upon patrons of the West Side subway. In full knowledge of the fact that morning exercises on Riverside Drive would attract thousands of marchers and hundreds of thousands of spectators, the Interborough cut the Broadway-Seventh Avenue subway service to the bone.

About 9:30 o'clock the southbound service to 95th Street collapsed. Local service was suspended and the local track between 95th Street and 142d Street was turned over to express service.

Three-car local trains were run up-town. Expresses and locals were jammed, and the scenes on the platforms were reminiscent of the rush hour battles on business days. It was the Interborough management's last chance to make its patrons uncomfortable, because it goes under orders of the Transit Commission for increased service to-morrow, and it didn't overlook a single opportunity.

Delightful weather, combined with the new interest in those who have given their lives for the country, a new interest created by the World War and its sacrifices and sustained by the Legion and other organizations—brought to the Drive one of the largest Memorial Day assemblages New York has seen in years.

The parade they saw, for the most part in an impressive tribute of silence, was made up as follows:

Y.; Catholic Boys' Brigade of U. S. Gov. Miller was announced as the principal speaker to be heard this afternoon, when, at 2 o'clock, those who are left of the "boys" of Gen. U. S. Grant Post, G. A. R., return to Riverside Drive for the annual Memorial Day exercises at Grant's Tomb, 123d Street.

Nine hundred and fifty bronze tree-plantings to the memory of 950 service men of the Borough of the Bronx who perished in the World War, were dedicated at exercises in Poe Park, 194th Street and Grand Concourse.

Washington Heights dedicated its memorial monument, near the 22d Regiment Armory at 188th Street.

Services were held at noon at St. Paul's Church and in St. Paul's graveyard. A wreath was placed upon the tomb there of Col. Etienne-Marie Bechet, military engineer on the staff of George Washington and first Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point.

There were smaller ceremonies in most of the cemeteries in the greater city, observances in the churches, exercises in the parks. Boy Scouts who lost their lives in the World War were remembered in a field mass celebrated at City College Stadium, 187th Street and Amsterdam Avenue. Shortly before noon a company of the friends of former Mayor John Purroy Mitchell assembled in his memory at his grave in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Early in the afternoon there was a parade of World War Veterans from 135th Street north to Broadway to 169th Street to take part in the dedication of Mitchell Square and the unveiling of a monument to the service men of Washington Heights and Inwood.

There were pilgrimages to the graves of Theodore Roosevelt and other national heroes. There was a memorial for radio operators lost at sea. In Inwood Park, at Hester and Essex Streets, the "new" east side held its first and very own Memorial Day celebration.

Features of a programme arranged by President Harry H. Schlicht of the downtown Chamber of Commerce included the participation of members of the 77th Division's famous Lost Battalion, the presence of many Gold Star mothers, and the grouping of hundreds of school children in a great living flag. Red, white and blue confetti was showered upon the marching members of the Hebrew War Veterans of the Republic.

All the veterans were out, Grand Army seniors, middle-aged folk who took part in the ructions of '98, boys who have scarcely begun to shave but who nevertheless know all about Chateau-Thierry and the way stations.

IN THE BRONX.
The Bronx did honor to its soldier lead to-day in a measure that surpassed anything previously attempted. The principal ceremony of the day was the parade along the Grand Concourse. It started at 141st Street and went through to Kingsbridge Road.

The reviewing stand was at Hush Street and there was a ten-minute halt at Poe Park, where the American Legion dedicated and placed a wreath upon the Broken Column, a Legion tribute to the unknown dead of all American wars.

The Bronx man Timothy Driscoll officiated at this service, with Father Patrick N. Breslin, Rabbi Arthur Neulander and the Rev. De Witt Pelton repeating the invocation. A salute by Battery F of the 108th Field Artillery, commanded by Capt. Sam E. McKelrick, brought the long line to a halt for this ceremony.

The Civil War Veterans in line were Grand Marshal Peter Beigel, Thomas Tuile, Harry Lerch, Morris Dietrich, Joseph A. Hans, Frank Ledogar, George Gade, James J. Lyons, Charles Smith, William Secor, William Haynes and William Robb.

The marching line was composed of nine divisions. The first division consisted of National Guard troops. The 108th Field Artillery, Col. Robert W. Marshall, commanding, was represented by the Second Battalion, Major Frank H. Hines in command. The 258th F. A. was commanded by Lieut. Col. Paul Loe Loewer.

The second division comprised the Tilden Post, Sons of Veterans, George W. Roeder commanding, the G. A. R. with members of the Tilden Post, 96 in carriages. George Gade commanding; the Women's Relief Corps of the Post, Mary Tuile, commanding, and the Sons of Veterans Auxiliary.

The Tilden Division was given over to Spanish War Veterans under command of P. A. McGee, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Paul Lerch in command, made up the fourth division. With Chairman Tim Driscoll in command, the American Legion comprised the fifth division. The sixth division was composed of the "Old Timers" headed by Louis F. Haffen and the pupils of P. S. 12, under John Condon.

The Junior Order of United American Mechanics composed the seventh division under L. W. Limpert, and the Boy and Girl Scout units made up the eighth division, which was commanded by George E. Schoettle. St. Augustine's Military Band and troop and a number of civic organizations made up the ninth division.

At the headquarters of a number of Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars posts there were separate ceremonies, following the big parade.

William Turnbull, up from Governor's Island to represent Major Gen. Bullard; Col. William Patton Griffith, Chairman of the G. A. R. Executive Committee, and a large array of city and county officials.

Brooklyn paid a lot of attention to the Third Division of a splendid parade—some called it the best Memorial Day parade the Borough has seen— which was made up of as much as remains of the Old Fourteenth, the Old 159th, the Old 158th and the Monitor Association.

In the stirring days of the early Sixties the men of the Fourteenth were known as the "Red-Legged Devils." There were 1,030 of them who set out for the battle front from Fulton Ferry, in May of '61. Only 24 survive. Only nine were able to appear to-day. Only five lasted as far as the reviewing stand. Four had fallen out, assisted to the sidewalks and comfort by strong arms and loving hands.

The oldest of the four Red Legs to make the journey was Capt. Ray Cardona. He's eighty-three. The youngest of the group was George Smith. "I'm only seventy-nine, said young Smith.

When Brooklyn's Spanish War contingent came along it was observed that Admiral Schley Post of the United States War Veterans was followed immediately by Admiral Sampson Post; but there was no disorder. (You must be at least thirty to catch the significance of this, but you can't be a kid for this ceremony.)

The boys of '98, who help to perpetuate the fame and glory of Schley, contributed one of the features of the parade in the manner in which they carried a flag. They carried it spread-eagle form, some marching in front, some behind and some on either side. It was said to be the battle flag the old U. S. S. Brooklyn carried against the Spanish at Santiago.

A marker on either side of one vehicle in the Brooklyn parade proclaimed that the grizzled old warrior who rode within, alone and in state, was the "Last Survivor of the Custer Massacre." This gentleman has been dying annually or semi-annually since 1884.

The only other person known to have lived so long and died so often in the United States is George Washington's black nurse.

Nearly 200 organizations took part in the Brooklyn Parade, marching in seven divisions. The parade began at the fountain in Bedford Avenue and proceeded through that thoroughfare to Washington Avenue, to Eastern Parkway and then to and past a reviewing stand adjacent to the Soldiers' and Sailors' Memorial Arch on Prospect Park Plaza.

The roster: THOMAS E. HOLT, Grand Marshal; ROBERT FORFAR, Adj. Gen.; H. C. DRAPER, Asst. Adj. Gen.; Staff: A. Ross Matheson, Bernard

IN BROOKLYN.
Some of the older folk who saw to-day's parade in Brooklyn recalled that on the first Decoration Day following the institution of the holiday and the founding of the Grand Army of the Republic the then City of Churches was represented by 120 G. A. R. posts with a total membership of 12,000.

To-day, fifty-seven years after the close of the Civil War, all the Grand Army "boys" who could be found in Brooklyn able to turn out numbered 375. And of the 120 posts of other years these veterans represented only twenty.

Of the 375 who brought out the old uniform for one day 375 elected to ride—five or ten years ago to have suggested "the carriage" for one of them might have meant a fight—and of the 100 who declared that they'd march none was asked to travel further than from Bedford Avenue and Pacific Street to the reviewing stand in Prospect Park Plaza, and many dropped out en route.

The reason Mayor Hylan failed to appear on the Riverside Drive reviewing stand was that he preferred to spend this holy day of the nation in his home borough. The Mayor was on the Brooklyn stand, with Congressman Lester D. Volk, Park Commissioner John N. Harman, Major

Murphy, George M. Smith, Col. Harry D. Baldwin, Capt. Peter S. Seely, Lt. Robert Van Dusen, Capt. Donald C. Strachan, Lt. J. Kenneth Mitchell, Peter A. Neale, John F. Spoliers, Henry W. The hungry half hour before bed-time

THERE comes a time—when you have been working late or playing hard—in the late evening, when you begin to have a faint and hungry feeling that must be satisfied! But you know from experience that rich food eaten late at night is not good for your digestion or your health.

Malted milk is an ideal food to take at such a time because it is so nourishing and so quickly and easily digested.

But get the new kind—Borden's Chocolate flavor Malted Milk. The chocolate flavor is already in it and adds much to its palatability. It has all the food value and nourishment of malted milk and the chocolate flavor besides.

Take it hot every night

For sound sleep and complete relaxation take hot Chocolate Malted Milk before retiring. Make it your habit to take it every night. You'll find yourself feeling rested and fit the next day. It's good for tired nerves and overtaxed strength. And it satisfies that hungry feeling.

You can get Borden's Chocolate Malted Milk at your own grocer's or druggist's. Get a package and begin using it tonight. You'll do the same tomorrow night, and the night after that too.
